1982 - 1983 Season

DANGEROUS CORNER

by J. B. Priestley

Sponsored by Lloyds Bank

50th Anniversary Production

22nd March to 2nd April, 1983

Suite Dreams

Slowly but surely more people are waking up to the fact that furniture covered in 100% pure new wool is more comfortable, more hard wearing and easier to care for than any other fabric available.

And, at the risk of sounding alarmist, far more flame retardant in the event of accidents with cigarettes or matches.

Take Sharnwood, the perfect compliment to any room decor. The frame is constructed from solid oak which, together with the luxurious cushioning gives a look and feel of inviting comfort and solidity that never goes out of style.

You're sitting pretty with frayling

in pure new wool...naturally

J. B. Priestley (Born 1894)

John Boynton Priestley, novelist, playwright and critic, first made his name with the dramatisation (with Edward Knoblock) of his own novel, The Good Companions, in 1931.

There followed three plays about time — Dangerous Corner (1932), Time and the Conways (1937) and I Have Been Here Before (1937).

His other successful plays include: Laburnum Grove (1933), Eden End (1934), When We are Married (1938), An Inspector Calls (1945), The Linden Tree (1947), Mr Kettle and Mrs Moon (1955), The Glass Cage (1957) and, in collaboration with his wife, Jacquetta Hawkes, Dragon's Mouth (1952) and The White Countess (1954). He also dramatised Iris Murdoch's novel, A Severed Head (1963), in collaboration with the author.

He was President of the first British Theatre Conference in 1948 and later became the first President of the British International Theatre Institute.
